

MedEx: Frequently Asked Questions

1. What is MedEx?

MedEx is short for the Medical Specialist Pre-entrance Examination (or Peperiksaan Pra-kemasukan Ijazah Lanjutan Perubatan). It was established by the Medical Deans Council of Malaysia and conducted by the Malaysian Examinations Council (Majlis Peperiksaan Malaysia, MPM) under Act 225, hence the authority to conduct examinations. It serves as one of the screening criteria to select good candidates to join clinical specialist training in Malaysian public universities. Different specialties apply different lists of Selection Criteria. Please refer to the Selection Criteria specific for the specialisation that you prefer.

2. How often is MedEx held?

MedEx is conducted only once a year for now but this may increase to twice a year in future.

3. How much is the fee to sit for MedEx?

The fee is RM800 for each paper. One paper represents one medical specialty, except for Pathology, which represents both General Pathology and Forensic Pathology.

4. How long is the validity of MedEx results?

The result is valid for 3 (three) years.

5. If I pass MedEx, will I be guaranteed a place in the clinical specialist training programme?

Your MedEx result is one of the requirements to join the clinical specialist training. However, there are other selection criteria to be fulfilled before you can be admitted into the programme. For further details for each programme, please refer to the Selection Criteria accessible in the MedEx Registration Portal.

6. How is the MedEx results expressed?

MedEx does not give a Pass or Fail result. It is given as Band 1 to 6, just like the MUET examination. Each specialty will decide which Band will be considered as the cut-off requirement for progress into the next stage of the selection process, e.g. an OSCE or interview session.

7. Do I have to pay for the next stage in the selection process, i.e. the interview?

No, you don't need to make additional payment for the interview. However, for certain specialties, more rigorous screening methods, e.g. OSCE, may be imposed and special payment may be required for this.

8. Can I sit more than one MedEx paper at one time?

Yes, you can sit as many papers as you wish based on the timetable given.

9. I am a House Officer – can I sit for MedEx?

Yes. Anyone can sit for the examination but please check the Selection Criteria for additional pre-requisites to join the clinical specialist training programme of your preference.

10. Is there a limit to how many times I can sit for MedEx?

No.

11. If I do well in MedEx, will I automatically qualify for training scholarships e.g. the Federal Training Award (Hadiah Latihan Persekutuan, HLP)?

HLP or any other training scholarship is managed by the sponsor (e.g. Ministry of Health) according to their terms and conditions. Please check with the respective sponsors.

12. Is MedEx a compulsory requirement for entry into the medical specialist programme?

MedEx is one of the compulsory requirements. For further details for each programme, please refer to the Selection Criteria accessible in the MedEx Registration Portal.

13. How many medical specialist programmes offer MedEx?

Currently, for this first series of MedEx, 15 out of 23 medical specialist programmes offer MedEx, including Forensic Pathology which shares the same MedEx paper with Pathology. The other 8 medical specialist programmes (Anaesthesiology, Emergency Medicine, ENT, Internal Medicine, Obstetrics and Gynaecology, Ophthalmology, Orthopaedics, and Public Health) will start offering MedEx next year. For this year, the entrance examination (if offered) and selection process for these 8 programmes continue as previously.

14. Is MedEx limited to Malaysian citizens only?

No. Foreign citizens can also sit for the MedEx as preparation for entry into the Malaysian medical specialist programme. For further details on pre-requisites for entry into each programme, please refer to the Selection Criteria accessible in the MedEx Registration Portal.
